Question or Comment:

Hi,

I read through your website and was horrified by everything you went through. I don't know if or how you can recover from something like this, but at least I hope your life is better these days than it was. I actually read it a few weeks ago because I was about to file a lawsuit, and I came across this in my own research. I have not been able to get it out of my mind. The whole thing is so depressing to read for you and the state of our legal system. Anyway, I mentioned this to my attorney but he said it was hard to compare the too cases. I'm not so sure about that though. I still let him file the case, and a few days ago, he got an insane nasty threatening letter from the defendant's attorney. Virtually every single "fact" in the letter was wrong - to the point it was almost a complete joke. They threatened to sue me for defamation, extortion, and a number of *insane* things that I never did (I wrote 2 angry emails...in January... that's it. There was no extortion ! in there.) My lawyer says it's typical and doesn't mean anything. What worries me is that he is very young and he could be very wrong... he was really the only person I could afford or who would take my case on a contingency. I am worried that was a stupid thing to do, and I may have my case dismissed but end up getting in more trouble via counter-claims. Anyway, I don't know if you would consider talking to me a little about your experience in the beginning of your case. I am terrified right now. I tried to go out with my friends over the weekend but am just completely frozen. Anyway, Wednesday is the day when all the counter-claims are supposedly going to be filed against me if we don't "dismiss with prejudice" (whatever that means)... anyway, thanks for any help.

Eric
